Australia

A long human history

The first people to live in Australia were the Aborigines. They arrived over 50,000 years ago. When the British arrived in 1788, they took the Aborigines' land. British prisons were too full, so the government began to send criminals (including children) to Australia.

In 1901, Australia became independent from Britain, but many Australians still had links with Britain and fought with Britain in both World Wars. Today, the links with Britain are much less strong. After 1945, Australia welcomed over three million immigrants from countries such as Greece, Italy and more recently, Vietnam and the Middle East. Now many Australians (including the Prime Minister) think that their country should become a republic.

Unique but poisonous wildlife

Because Australia is the world's largest island, it has developed unique plants and animals. They live in many different environments, from deserts and rainforests to coral reefs. Some animals can be dangerous. Remember to shake out your shoes or boots before you put them on in the morning – there might be a poisonous spider inside! Look out for snakes in the bush. They are very shy and will try to avoid you.

The Barrier Reef is a ribbon of islands 1200 miles long, off north-east Australia. At certain times of year there are poisonous jellyfish, but it is one of the best places in the world to go snorkelling and diving.

Koalas may look friendly, but they should be approached with care. They live only on certain types of eucalyptus leaves.*

Australia has the best beaches in the world. They are great for surfing, but beware of sharks, strong currents and very large waves.
